► ONCE WE WERE WARRIORS - 27/01/2010

On July 10, 1985, the Rainbow Warrior, the flagship of environmental organisation Greenpeace, was sunk by bombs placed by the French secret service, killing one of the full-time crew members. The attack was a response to the Greenpeace campaign against nuclear tests on Mururoa Atoll, a campaign that was having an immense impact on public opinion regarding the tests. Some of the original crew is now living together in a harmonious community on Waiheke Island, New Zealand. In this film, they recall the beginnings of the Rainbow Warrior. A huge amount of effort from volunteers transformed this rusty old ship into the symbol of environmental activism. Have their ideals proven to be tenable, and what has their activist past achieved for the world and for themselves?
